Committees Organize For Clean-Up And Rat Control Projects In County

Four-Month Environmental Effort Begins

Appomattox county citizens, residents and workers are being asked to involve themselves in a two-part program to clean up the total environment of the county.

One part of the program involves a change-over in operation of the Appomattox - Town-County landfill on Road 604 south of the town of Appomattox. Also, a change in operation of the Pamplin landfill. By January of 1972 Appomattox County supervisors must submit a plan to the Bureau of Solid Wastes and Vector Control for solid waste disposal that meets with state regulations.

The second part of the program is a rat control project with extension agent J. A. Smith as coordinator.

Here to explain the two projects on Tuesday evening, Nov. 30, was Paul Stewart representative of the Bureau of Solid Wastes and Vector Control.

Stewart said that each county must, within a reasonable length of time, provide for solid waste disposal in a manner approved by the Va. Bureau of Solid Wastes and Vector Control. He showed a motion picture which illustrated the use of a caterpillar tractor to dig a deep trench on suitable land, then use the earth to cover solid wastes-cans, garbage, bottles, etc. This should be a daily operation, explained Stewart in order to keep the sanitary fill area fee of odor, insects and rodents.

A suggestion to the county is install large metal receptacles in convenient areas for residents to deposit solid waste-then have a large packer truck empty each metal box and haul the contents to a santiary fill on a regular schedule.

A rat control project is considered by many sanitation experts to be a vital part of an environmental project, said Stewart. He said that rat problems become extreme, sometimes, if garbage dumps are closed without proper extermination of the rats who inhabit the dumps. Stewart cited instances in other counties and said that rats, starved out of closed dumping areas, will spread out in all directions around a previous dumping area, invading homes, gardens, garages and causing an extermination problem much worse than poisoning the rats before they leave a relatively smaller area.

As plans are developing now, rat poison, an anti-coagulant, will be offered to residents at cost, with directions for use and professional advice, also available without charge. The
